Madeleine Masson, of South African and French parentage, is well-known as the biographer of Countess Mountbatten of Burma and of 'Christine', the famous Polish secret agent who, after doing heroic work for the Allies during the Second World War, was tragically murdered in a London hotel.

Now Madeleine Masson turns to autobiography and tells the remarkable stor of her life and loves in Paris and Normandy just before the War.

Married as a very young girl to a French Baron whose main joys in life were the 36 quarterings in his family's coat-of-arms and the attentions of a mistress twenty years older than herself, Madeleine found her lit nuptial anything but a bed of roses. A passionate love affair with a young man who had followed her from South Africa introduced her to the more vinous aspects of Parisian night life; among her later admirers wee a brilliant Swiss artist, a Russian Count, a French antiquarian bookseller and his regrettably frisky old father.

Her friends and acquaintances included Colette, Marie Laurencin, the young Simenon, Fryn Tennyson Jesse, Anais Nin, Vita Sackville-West and Suzy Solidor. One of the strangest of her many curious experiences, on the run as the Germans marched into Paris in June 1940, was to find herself having to help Hitler's erstwhile friend, the notorious ex-Nazi Otto Strasser, who she cordially disliked, escape on the last boat from Bordeaux to England.

Often funny and sometimes deeply moving, 'I Never Kissed Paris Goodbye' combines nostalgia for the 1930s with a vigour, verve, and style which are all the author's own.
